Insist on a Substantial Cooling Off Period There is almost no way that a human being can go from being romantically attracted to someone to dating just friends in a short period of time. But that doesn't mean she's not interested in staying friends — it just means you need to make it clear how her that you've accepted her decision if how to go back to friends after dating have. Be clear about the type of relationship you want with her, and make sure she's on the same page. So it's usually in both your best interests to try and keep the friendship intact. I would say people look at me as outgoing and introspective. That said, if you act natural, communicate your feelings, and respect your friend, you'll find that you might start one of the most meaningful relationships in your life. But sometimes it does last. But what if you legitimately want to be friends afterwards. This is usually a good sign. Sometimes the issues that broke you up as a couple are going to be the same ones that keep you from being friends afterwards. I tell them I love and respect who they are as a person, and still care about them, but that Friends cannot see this going any further romantically. That's what I'm doing - we still talk throughout the day but we don't see each other as much. Take a breather, don't feel the need to 'prove' that you're over it by "hey, let's go do Friend Stuff right now, to show how dating friends now. It takes time, give yourselves some time apart, then you have a chance. It's no easy task, but it can be done. I've seen very mature people succumb to jealousy after quickly, and I've seen couples who fought all the time they were together grow into lifelong friends after the separation. Women often have a remarkable ability to tell if two people have had a romantic past. However, this very rarely happens. If so, she may be afraid that you're still not over her. But no contact of any kind what so ever. Jealousy would be too much for me. They are a meeting between two people in all aspects - emotional, social, and physical. Understand that, if the relationship falls apart, you will likely not be able to return to being friends. I get vulnerable with people, so they're more likely to open up to me. I'm a very genuine person, and I try very hard to see the other side of things in situations I go into. There is no definitive answer to this question.
